India beat Wales 4-2 but Fail to Book Direct Berth in Quarters

Hosts can still qualify if they beat New Zealand on Sunday

Bhubaneswar: A below-par India beat tournament debutants Wales 4-2 in their final pool match but failed to qualify directly for the quarterfinals of the FIBA Men's World Cup here on Thursday. India can still qualify for the quarterfinals if they beat New Zealand in their crossover match here on Sunday.

Akashdeep Singh (32nd and 45th minutes) struck twice, while Shamsher Singh (21st) and Harmanpreet Singh (48th) got the other goals for India.

Garth Furlong (42nd) and Jacob Draper (44th) were the goal-getters for Wales.

Needing to win by a margin of eight goals to directly qualify for the quarterfinals, India failed to live up to the expectations as they finished second in Pool D behind England. Both India and England ended their pool engagements on seven points each after winning two matches and drawing one but the European side topped Pool D on the basis of superior goal difference. England, who had outclassed Spain 4-0 in the earlier Pool D match here, have a better goal difference of plus nine as against four of India. PTI

Italian police temporarily seize Rubens painting amid investigation

Italian police recently seized an oil painting by 17th-century Flemish master Peter Paul Rubens after a fraud investigation into its owners. The painting, titled 'The Resurrected Christ Appears to his Mother', was on display as part of an exhibition in Genoa's Doge's Palace.

According to the Art Newspaper, the masterpiece has been returned to the exhibition. However, a probe into the Italian owners continues, as law enforcement officials look into how they allegedly smuggled the painting out of the country a decade ago in an elaborate plot to boost its market value. The police believe the owners used false documents to send it abroad and shell companies to pretend it had been sold.

The painting, which was insured for 4 million euros ($4.27 million), shows Jesus greeting his mother, with an unknown third woman between them. This third figure was absent from an earlier version of the same work by Rubens.

She worked for Twitter. Then she tweeted at Elon Musk

Sasha Solomon, a software engineer at Twitter, learnt she was fired when her Slack account and work email were suddenly locked. In her personal inbox was a single email from HR: "Your recent behaviour has violated company policy."

Solomon is not sure whether her recent tweets challenging Elon Musk caused her to lose her job, or if she was just one of the roughly 3,700 employees who were laid off soon after he took ownership. Radio silence

Solomon, who was part of the team that oversees Twitter's digital infrastructure, said she had heard second-hand rumours about tasks Musk wanted prioritised, but she and her colleagues received little or no interaction from the new leadership team. "There was zero communication, and I had no visibility," she said. Many employees learned of Musk's priorities through his Twitter feed. On November 5, he complained saying, "Search within Twitter reminds me of Infoseek in '98! That will also get a lot better pronto." That was more than Solomon and many of her colleagues had heard internally. She began to vent her frustration on Twitter. One of her first tweets came on November 6, shortly after Musk announced that any name change would cause the loss of a verified checkmark. Chiming in on the new policy, Solomon tweeted: "Full legal names only."

He said: "For example my full legal name is 'Sachin' the hellfire but I wanted to change my twitter name to 'sachin' the combination hellfire dumpster fire' I'd need to submit my proof of legal name change." On November 13, after Musk criticised Twitter's programming infrastructure, a task that fell under Solomon's purview, she called Musk's tweet inaccurate. If the app was slow in some countries, she said in an interview, "It was not because of the reasons he said. If he had come to know my team and said, 'How does this work?'"
